The objectives of designing faculty developing program is the guiding light in the design of a workshop. This clarity helps align every element of our workshop with your overarching goals, ensuring that our workshop content and activities are focused and effective. A clear purpose guides the design process, ensuring the workshop experience aligns with objectives. Our honorable speaker discussed that Workshops and seminars are more than necessary in higher studies where every aspect of the study is relevant to the market and industrial standards. Students communicate verbally with the live audience, sharing their ideas, which helps them boost their confidence and eliminate the public or stage fear. Along with this teacher find new teaching methods. Also, seminars provide a different environment for students than regular classrooms, and students learn more interestingly. Also, the role of seminars and workshops in helping students progress in academics and other day-to-day life was conferred. Several factors to consider in scheduling workshops including how much training is required for them and how practical it is to run them was discussed. Further the challenges faced by running successful workshops was conferred. They also deliberated the learning outcome developed by organizing seminars and workshops: What is your topic? What will people learn from this presentation and discussion? And how does it relate to the organization's goals, objectives, and strategy? Moreover, they also asked to Prepare a series of questions that will help participants make links between their own experiences and what is being presented and use these to guide the development of your program and also suggested how you will use the time allocated to the seminar? How will it be proportioned? This six-day Faculty Development Program on Importance of Seminars and Workshops equipped participants with the skills to design, conduct, and evaluate effective seminars and workshops, fostering professional development and enriching teaching practices.
